N the society page of a recent issue of the Washington Post is quite a chatty little bit of information regarding the Omaha Tuesday Musicale and their plans for the winter. One of the things which seemed to interest the editor particularly were the remarks of an Omaha woman described as "a prominent matron, a leader in everything that is chic and smart.'

This matron is quoted as saying, after the musicale, that hats must come off for all afternoon affairs for the coming year. "It shan's be necessary," she went on "for a woman to invest twenty-five dollars or more in a hat if she is relying upon the fact that she can show it off on her pretty head during some afternoon function. We will not have our

This is a very encouraging sign, that a society editor of the national capital should look to Omaha for hints. New York has been running things its own sweet way just a little too long. Other towns, even Kansas City, may now have an opportunity to contribute something to the social progress and refinement of American life.
